

MailOnline

By Sandra Parsons Last updated at 8:13 AM on 20th April 2011

Real Men Go For A Song, Davina

Davina McCall says she always wanted a 'real man' and describes her husband Matthew Robertson as an 'alpha male' who's quite capable of grabbing the TV remote and changing the channel without asking.

This is not my definition of masculinity, I have to say.

If you want a real man, how about Peruvian tenor Juan Diego Florez?

On the day his performance at New York's Metropolitan Opera was due to be recorded, he stayed with his wife as she was giving birth to their first child in a birthing pool.

The baby's head appeared 43 minutes before curtain up.

Florez stripped, got into the pool and spent the next 15 minutes bonding with his newborn son before getting dressed again and running to the opera house, arriving just in time to get changed.

The performance began on time, and he received a standing ovation.

That, Davina, is a real man.

